

The Web Weaver

The Web Weaver brings team unity, sensitivity, and enthusiasm through spontaneous sociability.

OK, so you're not the most responsible person in the world. You admit it. But one of the things you're really good at is connecting with others. In fact, that's kind of the point for you: People matter more than ideas or things or deadlines. You care about helping people, and you enjoy the closeness and connection you feel when you're in a group. You have a spontaneous nature, and that may be part of why you're good at developing relationships. Those around you may see you as fun because of your impulsive tendencies.

Your commitment to people is admirable, and your empathy and sensitivity to others can help you solve problems that come up, sometimes before other people are even aware of them. But keep in mind that, especially in a work situation, there will be certain expectations that you perform your job reliably. Most likely, you'll need to also demonstrate the ability to work with planning and persistence. So continue to use your social skills and gifts, but don't let them get in the way of meeting your responsibilities as an employee and co-worker.